Adamantine Vajra Armor Mantras Empowerments™

Channelled by Ramón Martínez Lopez. History: The Vairocanabhisambodhi-sutra was a work in the history of Tantric Buddhism, offering one of the first fully developed expositions of this form of Buddhism. In India and Tibet it came to be secret as a Carya Tantra, or “Practice Tantra,” corresponding to the second category of what was to become in Tibet the standard fourfold classification of Buddhist tantras, only to be eventually superseded to a large degree by the Sarvatathagatatattva samgraha and the large body of literature spawned by this latter text (corresponding to the Yoga and Anuttarayoga Tantras). In East Asia, on the other hand, the Vairocana - bhisambodhi-sutra has remained together with the Sarvatathagata tattva samgraha one of the two basic texts of Esoteric Buddhism and could indeed be said to have been the more influential of the two. (A translation of the Sarvatathagata - tattva samgraha, under the title Adamantine Pinnacle Sutra, appears in the volume Two Esoteric Sutras, Numata Center, 2001.)

To date no manuscript of the original Sanskrit text of the Vairocana bhisambodhi-sutra has been discovered (although a number of passages are either referenced in other Sanskrit works or preserved in Chinese transcription), but it was translated into Chinese (Taisho no. 848) and Tibetan (Peking no. 126). The Sanskrit title preserved in the Tibetan translation is Mahavairocana bhisambodhi - vikurvita dhirsthana-vaipulya sutrendraraja-nama-dharmaparyaya (Dharma Discourse Called “Mahavairocana’s Enlightenment, Miracles, and Empowerment,” King of the Best of the Extensive Scriptures). The title of the Chinese version, on the other hand, may be translated as “Scripture of the Enlightenment, Supernatural Transformations, and Empowerment of Mahavairocana,” but the Chinese commentary informs us that the full title included the words Mahavaipulya - sutrendra raja, which tallies closely with the title preserved in the Tibetan translation. (The term vaipulya-sutra, or “extensive scripture,” is a common designation of Mahayana sutras.) Buddhaghuhya, its chief commentator in India, meanwhile, refers to it as a tantra, and Sanskrit texts generally cite it simply as Vairo canabhisambodhi or Vairocana bhisambodhi-tantra. Since the Chinese translator Subha kara silha does not use the word tantra (and although it is widely known as the Mahavairocana-sutra), it will hereafter be referred to as the Vairo cana bhisambodhi-sutra.

The Vajra Armor Mantra is not only a powerful healing method, but a deep path to illumination, ultimately leading to the achievement of the rainbow body. It is one of the few paths, along with P'howa, that do not require the Ngondro (the 500,000 accumulations) as a prerequisite to practice. It is a path in its own right, with many levels and degrees of mastery. As one traverses the path, through a series of short retreats and ongoing practice, one systematically purifies the five elements within one's own body and thus attains the ability to purify the elemental imbalances in another. In this way, diseases are removed. With further training, the practitioner cuts through the five poisons of anger, desire, ignorance, jealousy and pride, and in turn attains the ability to work directly with the elemental essences in the environment. Thus, one is able to control the weather patterns, increase prosperity, subjugate harmful influences and restore peace and harmony. In advanced stages of training, one gains control over therefore preventing the rise and spread of contagious disease, natural disasters, and poverty. In the final stages of practice, the three poisons are transformed into the three kayas, and the five poisons become the five wisdoms. thus the very elemental essences of one's body are transmuted into the five wisdom lights, and one's own body is transformed into the 'rainbow body.'

Creative Tantra

From the Founder: Stewart Farquharson. "In India as the native gods of the forest, harvest and weather began to be replaced by gods of war and beauty and learning, older men retired to the jungle to ponder the riddle of life.

They learned to breathe in new ways, and to see with their mind a flow of light that accompanied that breath. Channels seemed to be carrying this energy, or prana, as they called it, to vital organs. The energy seemed to move the fingers of the old men. A finger could bind or release the energy of fire, water, air and earth. At least within you. Sounds bubbled from their mouths and the vibrations sang to the inner energy. Pictures were drawn on the dirt and sacred space was formed. Gods and goddesses were called - not as rulers, but as friends. As teachers who also were on the path to self-realization. This empowerment is going to teach you a simple do-it yourself but genuine tantric method."

Tantric Massage Attunements

If you have never tried a Tantric massage, then the experience will impress you deeply, it will not resemble anything you have tried before. In Tantra your body is seen like a temple of your soul, and so it is getting treated correspondingly. Unlike the therapeutic and sensual massage practice of the Western world based mostly on anatomy and physiology, the Tantric massage is rather a spiritual practice that affects your psychic-energy centers / chakras and allows the energy to freely flow through your body connecting your physical frame and your inner self. Thus, you achieve the harmony between your body and soul, and even the whole universe. It makes you open to new pleasant sensations, far more intense and prolonged than you have ever experienced.

The energy goes to your seven main chakras to balance male and female energy, or ying-yang aspect.

The main idea of Tantra is to move your focus from the end-result to the process itself. When you are not fixated on a quick release, you start enjoying the things you might never pay attention to, and then, surprisingly for you, you finally reach more powerful and explosive climaxes than you thought was possible.

The Tantric massage lasts longer than your usual massage session and combines chakra energy work with a full-body and a lingam or yoni massage. There is no point in rushing anywhere, as you know already that you have to concentrate on every single step of this almost sacred Tantric ritual and stop thinking about the finale. A Tantric massage session may include a sensual bath or a shower while the usage of fragrances and candles will help you to relax, clear your mind of all thoughts like during meditation and concentrate on your sensations. It is also very important to create the connection between a masseuse or a masseur and a receiving person, so you will learn more about the breathing pattern adjustment techniques, the importance of the eye contact and some other specific Tantric rituals designed not only to relax or excite you, but also to make you feel like a newly-born. You undergo a total transformation.

Doing physical massage or not. It is very healing. Used to balance the male-female energies in a couple.

Tantra attunements practitioners see the lingam and yoni massage as not mere stimulation of the most powerful erogenous zones, but as awakening and honoring of the sacred male and female creative energies. When one's sexual energy is raised high, then it can be spread throughout the whole body and even used for healing and renewing, it can remove all the traumatic emotional blocks and in the end you feel a new and better self, more content, tranquil and surprisingly refreshed and full of energy instead of utterly exhausted and spent. With the Tantric massage techniques you will be able not only to experience the higher level of pleasure, you will achieve the harmony between your body, soul and mind.

Can do distant healing with tantric energy.

You can make your massage with oils and essences after these attunements and activate any time you want.

If you are an amateur of massage, you don't worry the energy goes perfect after the attunements.

You can feel touch in different erotic-tantric manners with no even physical touch. This is the spiritual tantric energy from the masters of tantric spiritual light.
